

Exemple de contraction croisée – DST 1 – PTSI V

With the pandemic and the boom of telework, we witnessed an irreversible civilizational redefinition of the relationship to work. While the workplace used to be a place of community and shared identity, with a given rhythm and collaboration, now people work remotely, in front of a screen, with no sense of belonging and stretched interactions. As constraint and control vanished, working rhythms were reinvented, from sports breaks, to flexible hours; and the world of work needs to keep up with the new aspirations that were born with it: new skillsets can be developed, new hierarchies and relationships to the system built, and a new definition of work can emerge around values that are built through symbolic networking. And while telework has allowed for more autonomy, it has also changed our relationships to others, which need to be rethought for the sake of democracy.

Exemple de contraction croisée – DST 1 – PTSI V

With the pandemic and the boom of telework, we witnessed an irreversible civilizational redefinition of the relationship to work. While the workplace used to be a place of community and shared identity, with a given rhythm and collaboration, now people work remotely, in front of a screen, with no sense of belonging and stretched interactions. As constraint and control vanished, working rhythms were reinvented, from sports breaks, to flexible hours; and the world of work needs to keep up with the new aspirations that were born with it: new skillsets can be developed, new hierarchies and relationships to the system built, and a new definition of work can emerge around values that are built through symbolic networking. And while telework has allowed for more autonomy, it has also changed our relationships to others, which need to be rethought for the sake of democracy.